Why learn JAPANESE?

Japanese is the national language of Japan spoken by more than 124 million people, which is the 6th largest speaking population in the world. Other than Japan, some states in Republic of Palau speak Japanese as common language, and people in some part of Brazil uses Japanese due to the migration from Japan.

Japanese is the official language of Japan. All education, media, business, and government are conducted in Japanese. Although Japan is a relatively small country, it has a surprisingly large number of dialects differing from each other in pronunciation, grammar and vocabulary. Many of them are mutually unintelligible. They are usually divided into two major groups: Eastern Japanese and Western Japanese.

Japanese people give weight to the politeness and formality, Japanese language has an comprehensive grammatical system to express them. In Japanese language, there are three forms to express politeness and formality. It depends on the differing levels of social status to use each form. The social status are determined by a variety of factors including job, age, experience, or psychological state (e.g., a person asking a favour tends to do so politely).

We at TLN help you master the language and its nuances.
